Version HistoryQ: executing multiple commands in once shell script I have a shell script where i am running a command for different directories which should run in parallel based on the number of directories. I have used exec command to run the command exec But that's not executing the commands in parallel. If I run the script by changing the number of directories from 2 to 10 it executes command in a sequential order. Is there a way where i can run the commands in parallel? A: Shell commands are executed in a single process, which means that you can't run several of them simultaneously. You could pass directories as arguments to the script and use a loop to process those directories in parallel, or you could use GNU parallel which provides a way to run multiple commands at the same time in parallel. You could also use GNU parallel to process the directories sequentially, but if you are using the shell, it's probably more convenient to use a for loop. This is the syntax for GNU parallel: $ parallel some_command -N :::: You can also use --dry-run when running GNU parallel to see what the command will really do. TOKYO (Reuters) - Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe said on Sunday there was no political motivation behind the finance ministry's decision to ease fiscal rules to allow deficit spending, as speculation mounted about whether Abe's ruling coalition could start a political comeback. FILE PHOTO: Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe (R) and his wife Masako wave to the crowd as they leave the Imperial Palace following the New Year's inauguration ceremony in Tokyo, Japan January 2, 2019. REUTERS/Issei Kato In a response to a question about comments by a senior lawmaker in the ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP), Abe said the ministry's decision to allow a fiscal deficit this year of as much as 5.0 percent of GDP - a level that would not have been possible two years ago - was justified. "I understand that they have a sense that it is a time of need," Abe said of the LDP. "Under our free market economy, the goods and services sector expand when there is a confidence of the public. In this respect, there is no political motivation behind the finance ministry's action of
